Organic Horse Care

For millions of years, horses have chosen what to eat. They have selected herbs from their natural environment that help build them up, medicate their ills and – perhaps – for the pleasure of their taste.

Nowadays, organic healthcare is increasingly popular. Avoiding herbicides, insecticides, antibiotics and other pesticides is a key issue, but actively choosing herbal remedies is another part. Beyond that, there are more opportunities with natural therapies.

combination to achieve best health and performance. But she also promises to tell you if her assessment leads her to think that your horse will not improve any further. This means you can take him back and rethink his future.

Vav has worked with horses for many decades in several different capacities. She has competed in dressage, show-jumping, cross-country, eventing which allows her to understand most of your concerns. She has also bred her own horses. And as a professional rider she has met most of the medical and behavioural problems horses have.

This has helped her visiting chiropractic service the South Coast - for over 12 years now. She takes a holistic approach, working through from to the other. Problems can have several causes, may have complicated results. In her assessments, she finds some vital clues are very very puzzling. Known for occasional 'miracles', resolved some problems working together with the neither profession could deal with alone.

Vav addresses behavioural problems through her riding knowledge. She also brings in remedial saddle-fitting, and dentistry experts as required. And as a child, she was taught many of the old horseman's remedies in Scotland, so these broaden her range of treatment options even further.

Her facilities include stables within an American Barn and 20 acres of pasture so good the area was historically called Haylands. Situated near Ryde, Isle of Wight, with views down to the Solent, she runs the yard as a peaceful retreat. For many of those mystery medical problems, performance problems or recuperation after injury or surgery, this specialist yard can probably help.
